NO CRIMINAL CASES

CIRCUIT COURT NOW IN SESSION

Probable That the Jury Will Get Through This Week.—An Unusually Short Session.

Circuit court convened on Monday morning with Judge Charles M. Webb presiding. Although there were six criminal cases on the calendar, none of them were tried, all being put over until the next session of court with the exception of the case of the state against George Waterman, which was settled out of court.

The case of the Forster Waterbury company against the F. MacKinnon company was referred to a referee. This is a case that grew out of a claim by the MacKinnon company to the effect that castings furnished by the Forster company were not up to specifications.

A divorce was granted Mrs. John Cooley from her husband, with alimony at $20 per month and custody of the child as well as all the household effects.

The case of Anna Lyon against the city of Grand Rapids came up for trial on Tuesday morning. The plaintiff claims damages to the extent of $5,000 for injuries received while walking over a defective sidewalk. This case is still on trial.

Want the Green Bay.

A dispatch from Chicago, under date of last Saturday, to the St. Paul Pioneer Press says that renewed interest in the fortunes of the Green Bay & Western railroads has been aroused by the report that the Canadian Pacific is making offers for a majority of the stock for the purpose of gaining control. It was said that the offer made by the Canadian Pacific interests was considerably above the par value of the road.

There has been in the minds of railroad men a strong belief that some time when the condition was favorable the Canadian Pacific would endeavor to gain an entrance from the northwest or north. This of itself gives interest to the reported negotiation for the Green Bay & Western. Though this line would not give the Chicago connection which the Canadian Pacific is supposed to long for, it would remove the possibility of its falling into some rival's hands.

Waterworks Test.

The waterworks system was so near completed on Tuesday that the work of testing was commenced and it is expected that it will be carried along as rapidly as possible now until completed.

The pipe about the city is now considered that a very little more work will make it all right for use. The pipe leading across the river is the only questionable part of the system now, and it is entirely probable that a diver will have to be employed to put it into shape.

Nothing has as yet been done toward securing additional land for new springs to supply the system with spring water, the committee and the owner of the land being unable to come to any agreement on the price of the property. Some of the city officers are disinclined to buy additional property unless it can first be demonstrated that there is a sufficient water supply on the premises.

New Fraternal Order.

A new fraternal order, known as the National Fraternal League, has been organized in this city with a membership of thirty-nine. The lodge was organized by E. L. Barnes of Neenah, and the first meeting was held last Friday evening. The following officers were elected:

Councilor—Nathan Church.
Vice Councilor—W. H. Barnes.
Past Councilor—A. J. King.
Secretary—M. G. Gordon.
Treasurer—H. J. Giese.
Warden—Wm. Eberhardt.
Guard—Wm. Desain.
Trustee for one year—A. W. Gitchell.
Trustee for two years—Ben Hansen.
Trustee for three years—H. C. Timm.

The order meets in Natick's hall and will meet on Friday evenings until further notice.

Latus-Sucowske.

On Monday occurred the marriage of Miss Mary Latus to Stephen Sucowske. The ceremony was performed at the Catholic church and after the ceremony there was a reception at the home of the bride's parents on the west side, where a large number of invited guests assembled to partake of the good cheer set out for them. In the evening the young folks repaired to Ramthun's hall where dancing was kept up until a late hour, and all report a merry time. Mr. and Mrs. Sucowske will make their home in this city.

Burt Williams Coming.

On Wednesday, October 15th, the people of Grand Rapids will have the pleasure of listening to a speech by Burt Williams of Ashland, who will be the opera hall that evening, to address the public on the political issue of the day. Mr. Williams is a most entertaining talker and worth hearing by any one, no matter what their political belief may be. Mr. Williams has been enthusiastically received wherever he has spoken.

St. John's Church.

There will be no services on Sunday, Oct. 12 as announced, as Rev. Father Kroll has been called to New York on business.

High School Notes.

The second of the series of morning addresses was given to the pupils of the Howe High school last Friday morning by A. L. Fontaine. He spoke on the subject of the Primary election, giving an account of the origin and growth of the idea, the main features of the Minnesota Primary election law as well as of some others in operation in different parts of the country. A brief account of results which have followed the adoption of this system of nominations was followed by a discussion of some of the strong and the weak features of the system as it has been adopted in one sister state. The talk was a most instructive and interesting one and will be long remembered with pleasure by all.

Last Tuesday morning Sup't Youker gave an interesting address on "Extemporaneous Speaking." He cited many instances in the speeches of famous men which apparently were extemporeaneous, but nevertheless, had been carefully prepared at some time. He stated that extemporeaneous speaking was impossible, as at some time the material of the speech had been presented to the speaker's mind.

Last Thursday, after school, the first football team of the west side played the second team of the east side on the east side high school grounds. A large crowd of boys were in attendance. The score was 42 to 0 in favor of the east side team.

Many of the desks, which have been marked and scratched for a number of years, are now being repaired. This makes the room more cheerful.

The Misses Nellie Ward, Jessie Smith and Georgia Kellogg of the class of '02 were among last week's visitors.

The news topics on Monday morning were given as usual. Many pertained to some phase of the coal strike.

Miss Hattie Hurlbut of Cameron Junction was a visitor in the Senior classes last Tuesday afternoon.

The Misses Mayme Daly, Nellie Vincent and Florette de Nevers were visitors Monday afternoon.

Miss Gertrude Gaynor of the Senior class is absent from school on account of sickness.

Miss McDercher gave the Psychology class a test Monday morning.

Our boys have beaten Wausau at football. Score, 5 to 0.

Examinations are coming.

The New High School.

The building and grounds committee of the school commissioners hold a meeting this afternoon at the library building for the purpose of receiving bids on seating for the new school building. The furniture in the new building will be of the latest and most approved pattern as well as the rest of the building.

Work on the structure has been delayed during the past week on account of the contractors being unable to get the iron that was ordered some time ago. It seems that the concerns that furnish this material are rushed with orders and are unable to supply material with any degree of promptness.

The contracts call for the building to be finished and ready for occupancy by the 15th of March, and the commissioners fully expect that it will be completed by that time. The structure will be under roof inside of another month if nothing occurs to delay the work. The structure is beginning to present a very imposing appearance, even at the present time, and gives promise of being a very handsome building.

Gigantic Fur Sale.

On next Wednesday, October 15th, there will be at the Heineman Mercantile company's store a representative of one of the largest fur houses in the world, and on that day there will be exhibited one of the most stylish and up-to-date lines to be found in this part of the country. Now this is a chance like the ladies seldom have to see anything of this kind and the Heineman Mercantile company invites them all to come.

There will be all kinds of fur cloaks, capes, jackets, boas, and the nice thing is that everything will be of the very latest style and make, so it would be very foolish for you to miss seeing the display. Everybody will be welcome. The goods will be here to be shown and we want the people of Grand Rapids to see them.

HIGH SCHOOL WINS.

CLOSE GAME AT WAUSAU.

Are Starting Out in Good Style This Season.—Rose Here the 29th. Other Items of Interest.

Our high school team met their old rivals at Wausau on Saturday, and it was a hotly contested game from start to finish. The teams were evenly matched and the game was a most interesting one.

Grand Rapids succeeded in carrying the ball down the field for a touchdown early in the first half, but failed to kick goal. The ball then passed back and forth near the center of the field and the half closed 5 to 0 in favor of Grand Rapids.

In the second half neither side scored and the game closed with the ball near Wausau's goal. The game was a fine exhibition of clean, creditable football for both teams. The return game will be played in this city Saturday, November 1st. Following is the lineup of the teams:

Grand Rapids. Wausau.

Next Saturday the home boys will play the Merrill team in this city, when another good game may be looked for.

A Rest Cottage.—The members of the W. C. T. U. have rented the dwelling house on the west side alongside the Dixon house now occupied by Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Bennett, and as soon as the premises are vacated they will establish therein a resort to be known as a "Rest Cottage." The object is to have a place where people coming to town can repair to wait or rest where they can eat a lunch if they have one with them, and procure a cup of coffee or other refreshments of that nature. Similar institutions in other parts of the country have met with great success, and the projectors feel that there is a demand for something of the kind here. Beside the lunch feature there will be reading matter for those who care to make use of it, and everything possible will be done to make the place pleasant and homelike for those who attend it.

Charged With Larceny.—Two young men were brought down from Marshfield on Monday morning who had been arrested at Spencer charged with having stolen some butter. The creamery at Marshfield was broken into one night last week and several tubs of butter removed. Soon after the two young men appeared at Spencer with a number of tubs of butter which they wished to ship south. The agent at Spencer suspected that there might be something wrong and telephoned to the authorities at Marshfield and upon going to the place the butter was identified as belonging to the Marshfield creamery. The two men gave their names as Edward F. Clark and Clarence Irion. They will have their hearing at Marshfield on Friday.

Football Saturday.—Next Saturday the high school football team will play the Merrill football team in this city and lovers of this sport should not fail to be present at the game and help to cheer our boys to victory.

The Merrill team is claimed to be a strong one and if this is so we may look for a good game and one that will be full of interest. Our boys are playing good game this season the same as they did last year, and there is no reason why this should not be a good exhibition. The Merrill team will arrive on the noon train and leave again at 5:30 so it will be necessary to begin the game promptly at 2 o'clock in order to finish up in plenty of time. Rates of admission will be 25 cents for adults and 10 cents for children.

Women's Club Banquet.—The first meeting of the Women's club was held on Monday evening at the home of Mrs. John E. Daly. The first meeting of the season of this club is always devoted to a banquet and social, active work not being started until the second meeting. During the banquet there were toasts by Mrs. T. A. Lipke, Miss Celia Immons, Mrs. Beulah Biron and Miss Helen Kroner. The evening was very pleasantly spent and all were enthusiastic in their efforts to make the occasion one to be remembered by those present.

Mrs. George L. Williams of Milwaukee was the guest of the evening. The club will study Shakespeare the ensuing season.

Will They Vote.—This year the women of the state of Wisconsin will have a chance to show the people what they can do at the polls if they happen to have a desire that way. The women can vote for state and county superintendent, at least, and thus show the public how they stand on educational matters. It is not likely, however, that any great number of them will turn out. With very few exceptions it does not seem to be troubling the women very much who governs the land, and it is not likely that many will improve the opportunity to exercise the right of suffrage.

Our First Automobile.—The first automobile to be owned in the city is the property of George W. Davis, who received a machine on Thursday. It is what is known as the Oldsmobile, and is operated by gasoline.

George has been making numerous trips about the city since its receipt and hopes that in time all the horses in the vicinity will have seen the machine and become enough reconciled to its movements so that he can take a trip around the block without getting out every few feet to quiet refractory animals.

Mayor Rose Coming.—On the 29th of October Mayor David Rose of Milwaukee will be in this city to deliver a speech on the political issues of the day from a democratic standpoint. Mr. Rose has been here once this season when the opera house was packed to overflowing, and there is no doubt that there will be an equally large crowd to hear him if nothing intervenes to disarrange his itinerary as mapped out now. He will speak at several places in the country along the way.

Why don't You Register?—The registry lists were opened at the different polling places in the city on Tuesday, but very few people appeared at any of them to register. As a consequence the clerks are compelled to make up a list from any source they can get the information necessary, using either the poll lists, memory and any other method that happens to present itself. Every voter should register, as it often saves a great deal of time on election day, and saves the inconvenience of having to swear in your vote.

Dance a Success.—The dance given by the band boys on Thursday evening was a success both financially and socially, although there was not as large a crowd present as was expected for the first ball of the season. The music furnished by the band was very good and everybody present had a pleasant evening. It is the consensus of opinion that there will not be as many dances in this city during the coming winter as has marked the past several years.

Halloween Ball.—The members of the E. F. U. will give a grand ball on the evening of the 31st, on which occasion the general public is invited to appear at the opera house and have a good time. The order has secured the services of the Monarch orchestra so that the best of music may be looked for and there is no reason why every one who attends should not have a good time. Price of dance tickets will be 75 cents.

Gave Them a Farewell.—A large number of friends of Mr. and Mrs. Orrin Gray assembled at their home on Thursday evening to give them a farewell party, and a very pleasant evening was spent by those present. Mr. and Mrs. Gray have long been residents of this city, and they have many friends who regret to know that they are going to make their home in another city.

20th Century Place Closed.—The west side 20th Century place was closed this week, the receipts of the place not warranting the keeping of it open longer. Both of the places are now closed and it would seem that our people do not appreciate a public eating and reading room run on the plan that these places were, as they were very poorly attended at best, while at times they received little or no patronage.

A Narrow Escape.—Alfred St. Amour had a narrow escape from being killed or seriously injured on Friday. He was making his way along the street when the carelessness of a boy in charge of a delivery wagon caused the horse attached to the vehicle to run on the wheeled chair of Mr. St. Amour and demolish it. The chair was badly wrecked, but luckily Mr. St. Amour escaped without injury.

A Good Yield.—Kruger Brothers & Searles have a small marsh in the town of Grand Rapids near Biron which they are gradually developing and hope in time to have a cranberry marsh that will be a credit to the projectors. This season they harvested one hundred barrels from the marsh, although there is only about two acres bearing at the present time.

It was about midnight, and the moon in the east was strong enough to show all the paths through the forest.

It was at this time that the strange and wonderful scene was occurring in front of the old mill, and during which Nora Warner fell into the power of her old-time foe, the man most hateful to her on earth—the mad-house doctor.

As he left the house the Captain cast several glances over his shoulder in order to make sure that he was not followed. The very fact of his doing this would seem to indicate that he was bound upon some errand that would not bear inspection.

Once among the trees he made his way rapidly to a point where the shadows lay deepest, and there upon the ground lay the form of a man, silent and motionless. It was the mysterious foreigner.

The Captain had proven too much for even the keen detective, and his manner of convincing the man-hunter of the mistake he had made had been a forcible one.

In the struggle, and before Captain Grant had struck a favorable spot with his knife, the detective, whom he held under his knee, having knocked him flat with a sudden and terrible blow, caught two of the fingers of his gloved hand between his teeth, and almost bit them off at a point below the end joint.

The murdered man lay just where he had fallen, and realizing this, the Captain vanished among the trees, returning in less than ten minutes, leading a horse already equipped, which he had secreted in the forest to have ready in case of an emergency, for he was one of those men who always make sure of a way to retreat before proceeding any depth into their schemes.

Presently he was mounted upon the horse with the body of the foreign detective in front of him, and held in such a manner that it looked like a comrade asleep, with his head hanging upon his breast.

He kept in the densest portion of the forest, for he did not care to be seen by any one, though the chances of such an event at this hour would have been poor enough even upon the public highway, for the negroes were of too superstitious a nature to think of wandering about the country when ghosts and goblins were supposed to be abroad.

Because of his taking such a round-about way, instead of going direct, he was a much longer time in reaching the old mill than Roger had been when carrying Carol there, earlier in the night.

Strange how his mind should have also turned to this quarter as a place of hiding. Surely there must have been something more than chance in it all.

When he found himself in the immediate neighborhood of the haunted mill, Captain Grant brought his horse to a sudden halt, and placed his dead charge upon the ground. Then, securing his horse, he raised the limp form of the murdered detective in his arms, and, by the exertion of tremendous strength, bore it on.

He disappeared inside the old mill. There was a large chimney at one side of the mill, and, for some purpose or other, a hole had been made in this, the bricks lying upon the floor close by.

It required a Herculean strength to raise the dead detective to this opening, but as he was not a man of over a hundred and thirty pounds in weight, the Captain succeeded in accomplishing it. As he let go his hold he heard the body fall with a thump to the floor. Then all was quiet.

He made no change, not even touching one of the bricks upon the floor, for though it had at first been his intention to brick up the orifice in the chimney, upon second thought he realized it was wiser to leave things just as they were, for fear of exciting suspicions.

As he turned to leave he either saw, or fancied he did, the head of a man outlined in one of the windows against the light background.

The idea gave him such a start that he fell over a piece of old machinery that lay rusting upon the floor. This was the rickety chair that had reached the ears of Carol and the widow.

As soon as he could recover he fled hastily from the mill, turning once to look back, and then plunging in among the trees like a hunted stag.

Had there been a witness to the horrid horror? He shuddered at the thought, but found it impossible to decide whether it had been real or a specter of his imagination.

CHAPTER XII.

It was twilight.

The trees were incensing a requiem for departed day, and the last tinge of red was dying out of the western sky, when Carol suddenly sat up straight, and her heart seemed to stand still as she heard heavy footfalls outside.

An interval of silence ensued, and then there came a rap, loud and clear, upon the door of the haunted mill. Carol held her breath.

She could not imagine anyone else coming at that hour than Roger, and such had been the intensity of her recent thoughts and feelings toward him that it seemed to her she could not, dared not, meet his face to face, at least until she had time to recover her self-possession. So she remained back while her mother went to the door.

To her astonishment it was a strange voice that fell upon her ear—a voice that was full of eagerness and trembling.

"I have to beg your pardon for this late visit, madam, but I am looking for a friend of mine, and her continued absence has worried me more than I can tell you. Have you seen Nora Warner?"

Carol started, for she realized that this person, whoever he might be, was about to receive a shock. Evidently he was quite unaware of the terrible fate that had overtaken the poor girl, and that she was by that time, if still alive, confined within the walls of the mad house that had before been her prison.

Her mother retained her self-possession, though she knew full well there was a blow in store for this gentleman, whoever he might be.

"Step in, sir, and be seated. Do not refuse, for I have that to tell you that will strike a blow at your heart, perhaps, though I know not what relation you bear to Nora Warner," she said.

"Do not keep me in suspense, madam. Nora Warner was very dear to me. In heaven's name tell me what has happened to the poor girl," he pleaded.

"You know something of her former history, I presume?" inquired the lady.

She had a double object in view, the idea of finding out what he knew and whether the story of Nora Warner, as told to Carol, were true.

"There is nothing of her past that I do not know, madam, and if she has come to grieve I am well aware of the source. Let a hair of her head be injured and her villainous husband, Roger Darrel, must settle with me. Delay no longer, I pray you, for every second is torture to me."

There was something frank in the young man's voice and way of speaking, that went straight to the little lady's heart, and she knew that he was honest and manly, hence she sympathized with him in his sorrow.

"I see you are her friend, sir, and as such I shall confide the facts to you. Nora Warner has again fallen into the hands of those demons from whom she once before escaped. The mad-house doctor has been here."

"Is it possible?"

There was a gritting of the strong teeth, and even in the candle light she could see that the man's face paled with the comprehensive knowledge of what this meant.

"Curses on his head!" he muttered, fiercely, when she was done, "he is the worst demon on earth, and the time will come when retribution will fall upon him, and it shall be my hand that deals the blow. If he has dared to harm a hair of her head I shall torture the life out of him."

When he became calm he made inquiries, for it seemed that Nora had only told him the circumstances of her past without certain particulars, and he was glad to be shown the torn card which the doctor had left behind him, and which Carol had thoughtfully picked up from the place where she had thrown it on the previous night.

Of course this young man was the same whom we saw in the company of Nora Warner at the time when she fought her memorable duel with Captain Grant, the "Jack" whom the duelist thought he had seen before and yet could not place.

While they talked Carol had joined them and her presence was acknowledged by the young man with a polite bow. He was unable to say what had been Nora's mission in seeking the young girl again, but all he knew was that the poor deceived wife had discovered something of the utmost importance which must be communicated to Carol without delay if she would save her from years of intense suffering. This was what she had been trying her best to tell when the brutal keeper choked her further utterance.

The widow had not dared to tell Jack the full particulars of that terrible scene, for she saw that he was of an excitable temperament, and also that he loved Nora Warner, and she feared the result. It was enough for him to know that she was again in the power of those villains, and as he seemed to possess Nora's entire confidence it might be readily supposed that she had some time in the past given him to understand what manner of the doctor was.

While they were yet talking, something very like a snuffed stick reached their ears and caused them all to spring up.

"What was that?" asked each in wonder.

"They say this place is haunted because of singular noises heard here at times, but I found they originated in a very commonplace manner, for the loft above this mill was occupied by a troop of wild cats and during the night they were wont to indulge in a meler that to superstitions ears sounded like the shrieks of deadly foes, and their falls from rafters ended each combat was to them a repetition of the old murder that took place here. I remedied all that by shutting up the holes in the window by means of which they gained ingress, and ever since that time I have never been bothered by any unearthly sound. Whatever it was we heard just now, it came from the interior of the mill, and will bear investigation; so if you would do us a favor, sit, the time is at hand."

Jack was perfectly willing, and the three immediately entered the main portion of the mill by means of a door in the back of the widow's humble kitchen. They had lighted a lamp in place of the dim candle, and were thus enabled to look around them in all directions.

Again it sounded on their ears, this time Jack's face brightened, for he saw the hole in the great chimney, and striding up to it he cried into the orifice:

"Hello! where are you?"

The answer came immediately, and yet was so muffled that they could hardly distinguish it.

"In the chimney. For heaven's sake get me out quick! I believe I am dying."

There was but one way to accomplish this. Jack realized the fact at once. He handed the lamp to the little widow and replaced his revolver, feeling that he would have no occasion to use it, at least for the present.

Then he commenced endeavoring the orifice by tearing down the bricks, always working downward. Sometimes he had difficult work, but in the end he succeeded in his task, and the result was that at the end of ten or fifteen minutes he had cleared the way to within a foot or so of the ground.

Then stepping in, he beat down and raised the form of the foreign detective in his stout arms. When he had laid him on the floor of the mill, he bent over to examine the man's ghastly wounds.

"Who did this foul deed?" he asked in horror.

The man whispered in reply, for he was weak and almost dying. Jack uttered a sanguine curse, and gained his feet, cried in a voice that froze Carol with horror:

"Some more of that demon's work. May the curse of heaven blight him and his forever. He is one of Satan's tools and when we meet I shall send him to the master he serves. Witness the curse!"

CHAPTER XIV.

The words of the young man came very near killing Carol Richmond, for of course she thought all along he had reference to the Major Darrel she knew and loved, and I think of him as a murderer in addition to his other sins would have been enough to have entirely crushed her.

At the time she did not remember that her mother and herself had seen Captain Grant, or some one closely resembling him, leave the mill on the previous night some time between the hour when Nora Warner was carried off by her jailers and daybreak.

All she could think of was this one fact, that besides being guilty of all those other misdeeds, her Roger was not only a murderer at heart, but was in a fair way to become one in fact, for the unfortunate man upon the mill floor looked as though he were dying. Her heart was now steeled against Roger, and at their next meeting she must let him know that he could not even call her friend.

While Carol was thus thinking upon the matter, and deciding as to her future plans, Jack was examining the wounds of the detective.

"My man," said he finally, "you shall live—live for vengeance on the fiend whose hand struck those cowardly blows."

The face of the detective lighted up and a fierce gleam came into his eyes, for he would ask nothing better than that this man should die.

Gently raising him, Jack carried the poor man into the habitable part of the building and laid him upon the blankets prepared for him by the widow. Then he proceeded to dress the wounds, and the skill he exercised in this proved him to be a young physician of more than ordinary talents.

He had a case of remedies with him and before leaving the old mill on his search for lost Nora he left the medicines to be used in the hands of Carol's mother.

The detective possessed a magnificent constitution and his wounds were not fatal, so that he was in a fair way for speedy recovery, being in excellent hands.

Besides that, the burning desire for revenge upon the man who had dealt him such a cowardly blow was enough of an incentive to keep him alive, for it brought his will into play.

Gently raising him, Jack carried the poor man into the habitable part of the building and laid him upon the blankets prepared for him by the widow. Then he proceeded to dress the wounds, and the skill he exercised in this proved him to be a young physician of more than ordinary talents.

One of the most conspicuous incidents of the campaign thus far was at Madison, Friday evening, when an immense throng gathered, despite the rain that fell in torrents, to listen to Mayor Rose. A prominent Republican introduced the mayor and as he arose a delegation of Grand Army men, all members of the G. A. R., marched to the front and presented him with a handsome bouquet of American Beauty roses. The incident called for a brief oration by the Rev. Mr. Stevens, and the crowd responded with unanimous applause.

There was a remarkable scene in Madison Monday night, the home of Gov. La Follette, when Mayor Rose addressed the people of the capital city. The address was delivered in the Assembly chamber. The Capitol was abuzz and the various offices were turned into reception rooms.

The demonstration has caused the greatest alarm to the citizens of Madison.

Mayor Rose delivered ten addresses Tuesday, his concluding speech being in Richland Center. Farmers came a distance of fifteen miles to hear him. The court house, where the Democratic candidate for governor talked, was jammed and hundreds could not gain admission.

Mayor Rose recalled in brief terms the names of men who had conferred distinction upon this section of Wisconsin, mentioning the names of Moses M. Strang, Judges Crawford, Knowlton, Dunn and Caltrum. He took up the taxation question and discussed the incongruities of the present system, calling the present plan double taxation. He brought up the matter of the Frost bill. He said if Gov. La Follette would devote more of his attention to lightening the tax burdens on God's patient poor he would have more demand on their sympathy and their support. The speaker touched upon the school scandal charge, giving the details of the transaction.

Scores Stevens Bill.

In reference to the Stevens bill legislation, Mayor Rose took up the steps by which this law was sought to be enacted by Gov. La Follette and said that Senator Kreutzer and Harton and others tried to secure compromise and amendment without success. He said that there would be no change in the governor's attitude, and it would be the Stevens bill or nothing. He said that the Stevens bill took away the rights of the people to assemble, and was destructive of a representative form of government.

Mayor Rose took up the charge that he maintained a wide open policy in Milwaukee.

"Have you ever read the history of the constitutional convention which adopted the constitution of the United States?" he asked. "The Magna Charta, which has commanded and received the admiration of all the nations of this earth, and which was made so perfectly iron from its beginning that it has answered the purposes of a century with but few amendments and that was considered for days, nay, considered for weeks in constant debate and discussion? Why, the whole frame of the republican form of government is built around the central idea that the power shall reside in the people, sovereignty shall be theirs. The people shall be supreme."

"How shall the people consider these questions of public government unless they have an opportunity to come together unless they have a right to assemble, a right that is guaranteed to them not only by the constitution of our state, but by the constitution of the United States?"

Mayor Rose paid a tribute to the old soldiers and prefaced it by saying:

"Everywhere we go I see in the laps of the blue coats the badge of honor, the G. A. R. button. At Madison last Thursday night there was paid to me the highest compliment I have ever received, when Judge Barney, a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, one of the strongest lawyers in that section, always an active, aggressive representative of the Republican party, in behalf of a half hundred members of that party expressed the wish that, as representative of an opposing party, I might be elected, and pleased me their support."

"We have had here many a hard trial together, but the Democrats of Madison always found their courage and touched elbows with a little more determination, when the trial was the greatest, and never in all these trouble-some years did we fail to show to the world at large that in the capital city of Wisconsin the principles of the party of the people stand supreme and prominent, and never was there greater occasion than there is at this time for the restoration of those principles to control, the principles by which the people of this country will be happiest. (Applause.)

"It has pleased some of our newspapers to speak of us as having returned to politics. I have never been aware that I had left politics (applause), for my heart and soul is always with the interests of sound Democratic principles before the people (applause), and I especially rejoice in that cordial fraternity which through so many dark hours, through so many dark hours, has distinguished the Democracy of the city where I live and have lived for more than half a century.

Right to the Point!

better can we offset your prejudice than by making the daily store news brief, by avoiding meaningless trade terms and getting "right to the point." You who do not know the clothing business from the loom to the finished garment must depend upon the reputation of the store from which you buy. Confidence must exist between buyer and seller and too, there must be a strong foundation for that confidence. Enough--let 10 years of fair and upright business decide you where to buy.

The Marshfield Times says: "Regardless of the methods of the opposition the republican candidates will make clean and honorable campaign." This looks as if they were figuring on some dirty work. The democrats have always made a clean and honorable campaign, and the only time there was any dirty work done within the writers memory was four years ago when the republicans waited until the last minute and then got out some questionable stuff and circulated it after the opposition papers had all been printed, hoping thereby to influence the voters by bringing before them a mess of trash that a decent politician would not touch. They should have said: "Regardless of the methods pursued by the republicans in former years they have this year decided to carry on a clean and honorable campaign." Well, laying aside all arguments as to what they may have done heretofore, we are glad they have at last seen the error of their ways and reformed. A clean campaign won't hurt them any, and they may contract

The half breeds in the state of Wisconsin have made one of the most graceful hops in their principles ever chronicled in the history of the country. Gov. LaFollette in a speech recently stated that the tariff must be revised. He admitted that a tariff might be too high, but also stated that the trusts were not the outcome of the tariff. He admitted that a tariff that was too high might be taken advantage of by the habit, which would be a good thing.

Ellis Usher, who writes for the Milwaukee Journal, predicts that Gov. LaFollette will be elected and Senator Spooner beaten. We dont know what brand Ellis drinks, but it must be something awful to cause any such prediction as this. If he had said that both would be beaten or both would be elected or that Spooner would be elected and LaFollette beaten, there might be some method in his madness. As Mr. Usher's prognostications generally come out the other way, it is probably all right. We have only heard of one republican that was against Mr. Spooner, and that is LaFollette, and even he in his speeches has been telling of the excellent work that Mr. Spooner has been doing in the United States senate, apparently thus trying to dissipate the idea that he had ever said or done anything against his fellow republican, and of course he may be able to make himself think so but he can't do it with the rest of us. We rather think it will be LaFollette that's retired and Mr. Spooner that holds his job.

Praise Given Mathie's Move. The open statement of President Karl Mathie of the Wisconsin Association, that at the next convention of the association an amendment will be offered to the constitution forbidding the representatives of book companies from being active members of the association, is causing a great deal of talk among teachers of the state and the movement is very generally endorsed, it being the opinion that it will prove a great benefit to the association in removing the book men from being active participants in the association politics.

The leaders of the association believe in doing as well as promising, and besides advocating the amendment to the constitution stated, they have taken a long step forward along the line of reform by enacting a resolution which states in advance that all offers of subscriptions from book companies for the association's expenses will be refused and that in the future no book company will be allowed to give the badges or any other favor to the association.—Milwaukee News.

A Closer View of LaFollette

Orlando Burnett (Amos P. Wilder, editor Madison Journal, rep.): Gov. LaFollette has shown his hand in the Spooner matter, and no man by one act ever so staggered adherents—so undermined simple faith. Many of us felt as Little Nell did in "Old Curiosity Shop," when she saw the old grandfather gambling her earnings away—from that hour he must be watched night and day and she had no one but herself to depend upon. Slowly the impression is making its way even to the remotest farm that this interesting man has his limitations that sadly confound his professed program of reform. It is feared that generosity, breadth, consideration, the submergence of personal prejudice and hostility in the public good, in short, the large, sane, conservative quality of a statesman are lacking in LaFollette; that hate, jealousy and ambition have dismantled his motives and usefulness. I hope it may not be so, but it looks that way.

THROWN INTO THE LAKE.

Sophomores and Freshmen at University in Ducking Melee.

BOLD RAID AT MADISON.

Second Year Men Break Into Students' Rooms and Haze the New Boys.

Madison, Wis., Oct. 4.—[Special.] One of the most daring raids ever made at the University of Wisconsin took place last night between the hours of 9 and 10. Two sophomores, walking homeward about 8 o'clock last night encountered about fifty freshmen gathered on the corner of State and Francis streets. Thinking that the only ones daring to be out at that time must be sophomore they proceeded to join the crowd. The freshmen immediately surrounded the two and threatened to give them a bath in the lake. The sophomores, however, solemnly protested that they were Juniors and firmly believed in making the underclass believe that such was really the case. They were released and proceeded homeward. When about a block away from the freshman bunch they halted and gave the sophomore yell:

"Shh! 'em alive, shh! 'em alive,

Varsity, Varsity, 1005."

They then made for their rooms as fast as their legs could carry them.

Two Classes Clash.

This was the beginning of the trouble. In about one-half an hour fifty sophomores had collected and paraded the streets looking for freshmen upon whom to wreak their vengeance for the indignity put upon their class members. The freshmen, meanwhile, had kept together and the two classes met at the corner of Francis and Langdon streets, about one block from the lake. There was a general rush and before the fracas was over about fifteen of both classes had been given a taste of the cool water of Lake Mendota.

This incident only whetted the appetite of the sophomores for more fun. They proceeded to the house on Langdon street where lived two freshmen who had painted "W" on the varsity buildings and in this way gained the resentment of the sophomores.

Their room was on the ground floor and the yelling mob of sophomores stood outside the window and shouted to the freshmen to come out. This they refused to do. At length one of the sophomores, all other means of access having proved futile, precipitated himself headlong through the window of the freshmen's room. Once in he opened the door and let his comrades into the house. The freshmen were carried to the lake and after a few admonitory remarks were quietly and effectively ducked.

Dean Birge on Hazing.

Yesterday morning at convocation Dean Birge spoke very pointedly upon the subject of hazing, deplored the fact that the good name of the university should be tarnished through the action of a very few. He "roasted" not only the hazing, but also those who had defaced the university grounds and buildings.

The dean saw several sophomores a few evenings ago engaged in tormenting a freshman and this latest outbreak has thoroughly aroused him. Vague rumors of suspensions are in the air, but are probably without foundation as so far nothing really malicious has been done. The fun has all gone on good naturally.

On Monday the annual class crush will take place.

Fraternities Pledging New Members.

The "rush" season of the fraternities of the University of Wisconsin is on in full swing now and many of the new students are paying as much attention to the numerous "frat" doings as to their studies. The fraternities will be very strong this year as they have already pledged a considerable number of new members. The lists of pledged members are not yet complete; the Wisconsin will print the names of all the new members as soon as these lists are completed.

MILWAUKEE MAN DECLARED INSANE.

He Said that He Intended to Kill Dartington Doctor for Alienating Affections of His Sweetheart.

A jury in the circuit court brought in a verdict of insanity against Sterling J. Austin last night, after being out six hours. He will be taken to the insane asylum at Mendota Monday.

Austin says his home is in Milwaukee. He claims that he came here to kill Dr. W. W. Peck, a well-known physician of this place, who he declares alienated the affections of a young woman to whom Austin had paid marked attention.

SUES FOR $100,000 DAMAGES.

Racine Man Says that He was Badly Injured by Assault.

Racine, Wis., Oct. 4.—[Special.]—Herman Oberg has brought suit for $100,000 damages against John Kosterman and his son John, alleging that they assaulted him so severely that he is confined in a hospital and may not recover. The Kostermans claim that they struck Oberg in self defense.

SAYS LORD CAME TO HIM.

REV. A. DALSTROM CLAIMS HE WAS INSPIRED TO WRITE A BOOK.

ILL SEVERAL MONTHS.

—A Leading Mason.

West Superior, Wis., Oct. 4.—[Special.]—"The Lord spoke in Swedish to me and told me that He was well satisfied with me, that I had done well, was a good and faithful servant and should write forth and write a book on the subject of marriage," says Rev. Albert Dalstrom, the preceptor to a book printed in the Swedish language, and which book helped to make the trouble in which Mr. Dalstrom now finds himself here. He is in court today to answer to the charge of using abusive language toward Mrs. Johnson.

The book referred to was written by Rev. Mr. Dalstrom after he had broken away from the Salvation Army and after he had left the city of St. Paul. The Scandinavian people there made it anathema for him by raising something of a scandal about him, a preacher and married man, and "well high disengaged" as his book says, he sought refuge in a hotel in the suburbs of Chicago. There on a Sunday the Lord appeared to him in person and told him to write his book.

After the visitation Mr. Dalstrom grew doubtful and he wondered whether it was not some Swedish man come to make sport of him. He sought the proprietor of the hotel; there had been no other Swedish man registered there and there was no Swedish man connected with the hotel. It must have been a stranger. So Rev. Dalstrom says he was convinced that he had been honored by a special visitation and he wrote a book exploiting his views on the subject of marriage.

It is the sentiment in this book that prompted the questions put in the preacher's tent meeting here, which questions brought forth, it is alleged, the denunciation, "Woman, you are a liar and a low woman."

And next day the preacher was arrested and placed under bonds to appear today and answer to the charge. The preacher has some admirers here who will help him fight his case if help is called for. He has adopted a course of pitching into church people in his meetings and this has pleased a certain element. Rev. Dalstrom is well known to Scandinavian people throughout the Northwest and gained considerable notoriety by his meetings at St. Paul.

UNIONIZE LABOR AT WAUSAU.

Workmen of that City are Organizing a Trades' Council.

A BIG SHOE FACTORY.

From a Small Beginning in 1850 it Grew to Immense Proportions.

THE F. MAYER BOOT & SHOE CO. of Milwaukee, Wis., now occupies 3½ Acres of Floor Space, and has capacity for making 6000 pairs of Shoes per Day.

Just 22 years ago Mr. F. Mayer established a shoe factory in Milwaukee, and began the manufacture of shoes in a modest way. The working force at that time was small and the facilities inadequate, yet it was the foundation of what was destined to be one of the largest shoe factories in this country. The underlying business principle was then, as now, to produce the best shoes possible at the lowest prices. That this policy was successful has been demonstrated by the fact that shoes bearing the Mayer trade mark are now sold in every state and territory west of the Ohio river. Over 600 people are kept busy asees supplying a demand that has steadily increased as a result of the universal satisfaction given by Mayer's shoes.

Milwaukee being the home of the biggest leather tanneries in the world, and also the market for the very best shoe leather known, gives the Milwaukee manufacturer advantages in cost as well as the choice of leather, that outside manufacturers cannot obtain, thus enabling the Mayer shoe factory to turn out better shoes at less cost than outside competitors.

Something like 40 traveling salesmen are required to visit merchants in thousands of towns and villages in twenty different states. The magnitude of this business can best be appreciated when you take into consideration that, with the present capacity, 6000 complete pairs of shoes can be turned out every working day.

The business is now conducted under the name of the F. Mayer Boot & Shoe Co., by the three sons of Mr. F. Mayer, who succeeded him in the business. As Mayer's shoes are being liberally advertised the further growth of the company is sure to be rapid.

A Historic Hitching Post.

One of the oldest signs in Washington is the cast iron figure of a Chinaman, about 3½ feet in height, that stands in front of a livery stable on Sixth street northwest, between Pennsylvania and Louisiana avenues. It has been there since 1852 and is one of the familiar landmarks of the city.

During the Civil war Gen. Grant, McClellan, Hooker and others, who patronized this stable a great deal, tied their steeds to this hitching post, and since then other distinguished personages have had occasion to use this post during every presidential inauguration that has occurred since Lincoln's second term.

As a matter of fact, this bunch of Sixth and Louisiana avenues is a historic locality in more than one sense. It was on the corner of this street and Louisiana avenue that Gen. Robert E. Lee bade farewell to his old commander, Gen. Winfield Scott, when the former withdrew from the union army to join that of the confederates. During the first two years of the war Gen. McClellan and others came here regularly to purchase and inspect horses, it being at that time a sort of horse market.—Baltimore American.

Sagacity of Hawks.

A strange instance of sagacity in two partridges has just been told. They had often been seen following trains in Croatia without any explanation suggesting itself, until one afternoon the train suddenly put up a cover of young partridges, and this gave the answer to the riddle. The hunting bird must have noticed, while soaring for his pleasure, that the noise of the train often put up game, and this gave him the idea of making use of the train as a beater for his own benefit.

"Yes, sir," replied the clerk.

"Absent from illness?"

"Oh, you're honest, at any rate. Most men would say they were."

"I haven't been absent from illness for nearly year."

"You haven't?" The old man looked surprised.

"No, sir. It has been with me all the time."

"What has?"

"Illness of some sort."

"But you said that yesterday . . ."

"Yesterday I was absent on account of illness, sir."

"The old man thought the matter over for a minute or two, and then he said:

"Yes, sir. Study to use them correctly."

"Of course; and I'm a trifle careless. Please see if this sentence is correct: 'Hereafter you will be absent from my displeasure.'"

The Century contains an article by Rev. Henry M. Wharton on "The boyhood of Mark Twain." The "lovable little city of Hannibal," according to the writer, is the home of some of the originals of Mark Twain's characters. Perhaps one of the best known is referred to as follows: "The prototype of Col. Sellers was a well-known neighbor of Clemens in Hannibal. It used to be told of this man that in a public address he once declared that though he and his audience might not live to see it, the time would come when a traveler might take a train in Hannibal which, without change of cars, would land him at Puget Sound. Of course the villagers laughed him to scorn, for they had in mind only the little pulling, wheezing steamboat and the stage coach of that day. Yet it is literally true that an express train passes Hannibal every day bound, without change, for Puget Sound. Another characteristic incident: A number of citizens were standing in front of a store watching an eclipse of the sun. Not a word was spoken, all being awed into reverential silence, when suddenly the voice of this well-known resident was heard to say: 'Gentlemen, give me your attention! The man who says "there is no God" is a damned fool!'"

The English papers tell of a young Parisian in London, visiting the "Chamber of Horrors" at Tussaud's. Being alone he was seized with an impulse to pull his neck in the lunette wherein had rested that of Marie Antoinette. He lay down, touched a spring, and closed the collar. But how was he to release himself? If he touched the wrong spring the fatal axe might descend. Before long a crowd of visitors, led by an attendant, came on the scene. The guide was a bit of linguist and saw an opportunity, with himself as master of the situation. He at once began a practical lecture on the guillotine, interrupting his remarks with little asides in French to the indignant victim, asking him to scream louder or writhe more agonizingly. "How well he acts!" exclaimed the gratified onlookers. Finally the Parisian was released, and, answering the applause with maledictions, fled.

Alfalfa Clover.

From Fond du Lac comes a report that farmers are trying alfalfa as a fodder plant with much success. Alfalfa is a sort of clover which yields three crops a year and is a excellent fodder and of some good as a pasture. The peculiar value of this plant is not confined to feeding purposes. It has a wonderful capacity for extracting nitrogen from the atmosphere and transferring it to the soil. So it becomes a fertilizer of great value. But here it has another peculiarity. This power to extract nitrogen depends on certain little nodules clustering about the roots and these in turn depend on a particular microbe, or something of the sort, which exists in some soils and not in others. Where this particular microbe is absent, alfalfa does not do well. But by scattering some little soil from infected fields, the plant begins to prosper and soon has all its needs. So if the alfalfa does not grow luxuriantly as it should, very likely a little fertilization from soil in which it has prospered will set the plant "on its feet." Much of the prairie soil is already impregnated with this microbe. Some sandy soils are without it. Any soil will retain it when once introduced. Application to any of the agricultural bureaus at Washington, will bring circulars of information and directions. Farmers should all be in close communication with these bureaus, anyway.

NO CRIMINAL CASES

CIRCUIT COURT NOW IN SESSION

Probable That the Jury Will Get Through This Week.—An Unusually Short Session.

Circuit court convened on Monday morning with Judge Charles M. Webb presiding. Although there were six criminal cases on the calendar, none of them were tried, all being put over until the next session of court with the exception of the case of the state against George Waterman, which was settled out of court.

The case of the Forster Waterbury company against the F. MacKinnon company was referred to a referee. This is a case that grew out of a claim by the MacKinnon company to the effect that castings furnished by the Forster company were not up to specifications.

A divorce was granted Mrs. John Cooley from her husband, with alimony at $20 per month and custody of the child as well as all the household effects.

The case of Anna Lyon against the city of Grand Rapids came up for trial on Tuesday morning. The plaintiff claims damages to the extent of $5,000 for injuries received while walking over a defective sidewalk. This case is still on trial.

Want the Green Bay.

A dispatch from Chicago, under date of last Saturday, to the St. Paul Pioneer Press says that renewed interest in the fortunes of the Green Bay & Western railroad has been aroused by the report that the Canadian Pacific is making offers for a majority of the stock for the purpose of gaining control. It was said that the offer made by the Canadian Pacific interests was considerably above the par value of the road.

There has been in the minds of railroad men a strong belief that some time when the condition was favorable the Canadian Pacific would endeavor to gain an entrance from the northwest or north. This of itself gives interest to the reported negotiation for the Green Bay & Western. Though this line would not give the Chicago connection which the Canadian Pacific is supposed to long for, it would remove the possibility of its falling into some rival's hands.

Waterworks Test.

The waterworks system was so near completed on Tuesday that the work of testing was commenced and it is expected that it will be carried along as rapidly as possible now until completed.

The pipe about the city is now considered that a very little more work will make it all right for use. The pipe leading across the river is the only questionable part of the system now, and it is entirely probable that a diver will have to be employed to put it into shape.

Nothing has as yet been done toward securing additional land for new springs to supply the system with spring water, the committee and the owner of the land being unable to come to any agreement on the price of the property. Some of the city officers are disinclined to buy additional property unless it can first be demonstrated that there is a sufficient water supply on the premises.

New Fraternal Order.

A new fraternal order, known as the National Fraternal League, has been organized in this city with a membership of thirty-nine. The lodge was organized by E. L. Barnes of Needah, and the first meeting was held last Friday evening. The following officers were elected:

Councilor—Nathan Church.
Vice Councilor—W. H. Barnes.
Past Councilor—A. J. King.
Secretary—M. G. Gordon.
Treasurer—H. J. Giese.
Warden—Wm. Eberhardt.
Guard—Wm. Dessaix.
Trustee for one year—A. W. Gitchell.
Trustee for two years—Ben Hansen.
Trustee for three years—H. C. Timm.
The order meets in Natick's hall and will meet on Friday evenings until further notice.

Latus-Sucowske.

On Monday occurred the marriage of Miss Mary Latus to Stephen Sucowske. The ceremony was performed at the Catholic church and after the ceremony there was a reception at the home of the bride's parents on the west side, where a large number of invited guests assembled to partake of the good cheer set out for them. In the evening the young folks repaired to Ramthorn's hall where dancing was kept up until a late hour, and all report a merry time. Mr. and Mrs. Sucowske will make their home in this city.

Burt Williams Coming.

On Wednesday, October 15th, the people of Grand Rapids will have the pleasure of listening to a speech by Burt Williams of Ashland, who will be the opera hall that evening, to address the public on the political issue of the day. Mr. Williams is a most entertaining talker and worth hearing by any one, no matter what their political belief may be. Mr. Williams has been enthusiastically received wherever he has spoken.

St. John's Church.

There will be no services on Sunday, Oct. 12 as announced, as Rev. Father Kroll has been called to New York on business.

High School Notes.

The second of the series of morning addresses was given to the pupils of the Howe High school last Friday morning by A. L. Fontaine. He spoke on the subject of the Primary election, giving an account of the origin and growth of the idea, the main features of the Minnesota Primary election law as well as of some others in operation in different parts of the country. A brief account of results which have followed the adoption of this system of nominations was followed by a discussion of some of the strong and the weak features of the system as it has been adopted in our sister state. The talk was a most instructive and interesting one and will be long remembered with pleasure by all.

Last Tuesday morning Sup'r Youker gave an interesting address on "Extemporaneous Speaking." He cited many instances in the speeches of famous men which apparently were extemporaneous, but, nevertheless, had been carefully prepared at some time. He stated that extemporaneous speaking was impossible, as at some time the material of the speech had been presented to the speaker's mind.

Last Thursday, after school, the first football team of the west side played the second team of the east side on the east side high school grounds. A large crowd of boys were in attendance. The score was +2 to 0 in favor of the east side team.

Many of the desks, which have been marked and scratched for a number of years, are now being repaired. This makes the room more cheerful.

The Misses Nellie Ward, Jessie Smith and Georgie Kellogg of the class of '02 were among last week's visitors.

The news topics on Monday morning were given as usual. Many pertained to some phase of the coal strike.

Miss Hattie Hurlburt of Cameron Junction was a visitor in the Senior classes last Tuesday afternoon.

The Misses Mayme Daly, Nellie Vincent and Florette de Nevers were visitors Monday afternoon.

Miss Gertrude Gaynor of the Senior class is absent from school on account of sickness.

Miss McKercher gave the Psychology class a test Monday morning.

Our boys have beaten Wausau at football. Score, 5 to 0.

Examinations are coming.

The New High School.

The building and grounds committee of the school commissioners held a meeting this afternoon at the library building for the purpose of receiving bids on seating for the new school building. The furniture in the new building will be of the latest and most approved pattern as well as the rest of the building.

Work on the structure has been delayed during the past week on account of the contractors being unable to get the iron that was ordered some time ago. It seems that the concerns that furnish this material are rushed with orders and are unable to supply material with any degree of promptness.

The contracts call for the building to be finished and ready for occupancy by the 15th of March, and the commissioners fully expect that it will be completed by that time. The structure will be under roof inside of another month if nothing occurs to delay the work. The structure is beginning to present a very imposing appearance, even at the present time, and gives promise of being a very handsome building.

Gigantic Fur Sale.

On next Wednesday, October 15th, there will be at the Heineman Mercantile company's store a representative of one of the largest fur houses in the world, and on that day there will be exhibited one of the most stylish and up-to-date lines to be found in this part of the country. Now this is a chance like the ladies seldom have to see anything of this kind and the Heineman Mercantile company invites all to come.

There will be all kinds of fur cloaks, capes, jackets, boas, and the nice thing is that everything will be of the very latest style and make, so it would be very foolish for you to miss seeing the display. Everybody will be welcome. The goods will be here to be shown and we want the people of Grand Rapids to see them.

HIGH SCHOOL WINS.

CLOSE GAME AT WAUSAU.

Are Starting Out In Good Style This Season.—Rose Here the 29th.
Other Items of Interest.

Our high school team met their old rivals at Wausau on Saturday, and it was a hotly contested game from start to finish. The teams were evenly matched and the game was a most interesting one.

Grand Rapids succeeded in carrying the ball down the field for a touchdown early in the first half, but failed to kick goal. The ball then passed back and forth near the center of the field and the half closed 5 to 0 in favor of Grand Rapids.

In the second half neither side scored and the game closed with the ball near Wausau's goal. The game was a fine exhibition of clean, creditable football for both teams. The return game will be played in this city on Saturday, November 1st. Following is the lineup of the teams:

Grand Rapids. Wausau.
Kinner, center. Young
Potter, right guard. Buelow
Kenne, left guard. Wick
Kelly, right tackle. Sipes
Wood, left tackle. Benson
McCarthy, right end. E. O'Brien
Bandelin, left end. J. O'Brien
Horner, right half. Sherman
Gurney, left half. Fleming
Brennan, full back. Wilson
W. L. Oswald, officials. Manson
Sup'r. Youker, time keepers. W. L. Schultz hmen. Johnson

Next Saturday the home boys will play the Merrill team in this city, when another good game may be looked for.

A Rest Cottage.—The members of the W. C. T. U. have rented the dwelling house on the west side alongside the Dixon house now occupied by Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Bennett, and as soon as the premises are vacated they will establish therein a resort to be known as a "Rest Cottage." The object is to have a place where people coming to town can repair to wait or rest where they can eat a lunch if they have one with them, and procure a cup of coffee or other refreshments of that nature. Similar institutions in other parts of the country have met with great success, and the projectors feel that there is a demand for something of the kind here. Besides the lunch feature there will be reading matter for those who care to make use of it, and everything possible will be done to make the place pleasant and homelike for those who attend it.

Charged With Larceny.—Two young men were brought down from Marshfield on Monday morning who had been arrested at Spencer charged with having stolen some butter. The creamery at Marshfield was broken into one night last week and several tubs of butter removed. Soon after the two young men appeared at Spencer with a number of tubs of butter which they wished to ship south. The agent at Spencer suspected that there might be something wrong and telephoned to the authorities at Marshfield and upon going to the place the butter was identified as belonging to the Marshfield creamery. The two men gave their names as Edward F. Clark and Clarence Irion. They will have their hearing at Marshfield on Friday.

Football Saturday.—Next Saturday the high school football team will play the Merrill football team in this city and lovers of this sport should not fail to be present at the game and help to cheer our boys to victory. The Merrill team is claimed to be a strong one and if this is so we may look for a good game and one that will be full of interest. Our boys are playing a good game this season the same as they did last year, and there is no reason why this should not be a good exhibition. The Merrill team will arrive on the noon train and leave again at 5:30 so it will be necessary to begin the game promptly at 2 o'clock in order to finish up in plenty of time. Rates of admission will be 25 cents for adults and 10 cents for children.

Women's Club Banquet.—The first meeting of the Women's club was held on Monday evening at the home of Mrs. John E. Daly. The first meeting of the season of this club is always devoted to a banquet and social active work not being started until the second meeting. During the banquet there were toasts by Mrs. T. A. Lipke, Miss Celia Emmons, Mrs. Beulah Birn and Miss Helen Kromer. The evening was very pleasantly spent and all were enthusiastic in their efforts to make the occasion one to be remembered by those present. Mrs. George L. Williams of Milwaukee was the guest of the evening. The club will study Shakespeare the ensuing season.

Will They Vote.—This year the women of the state of Wisconsin will have a chance to show the people what they can do at the polls if they happen to have a desire that way. The women can vote for state and county superintendent, at least, and thus show the public how they stand on educational matters. It is not likely, however, that any great number of them will turn out. With very few exceptions it does not seem to be troubling the women very much who governs the land, and it is not likely that many will improve the opportunity to exercise the right of suffrage.

Our First Automobile.—The first automobile to be owned in the city is the property of George W. Davis, who received a machine on Thursday. It is what is known as the Oldsmobile, and is operated by gasoline. George has been making numerous trips about the city since its receipt and hopes that in time all the horses in the vicinity will have seen the machine and become enough reconciled to its movements so that he can take a trip around the block without getting out every few feet to quiet retractor animals.

Mayor Rose Coming.—On the 29th of October Mayor David Rose of Milwaukee will be in this city to deliver a speech on the political issues of the day from a democratic standpoint. Mr. Rose has been here once this season when the opera house was packed to overflowing, and there is no doubt that there will be an large crowd to hear him if nothing intervenes to disarrange his itinerary as mapped out now. He will also speak at several places in the country along the way.

Why don't You Register?—The registry lists were opened at the different polling places in the city on Tuesday, but very few people appeared at any of them to register. As a consequence the clerks are compelled to make up a list from source they can get the information necessary, using either the poll lists, memory and any other method that happens to present itself. Every voter should register, as it often saves a great deal of time on election day, and saves the inconvenience of having to swear in your vote.

Dance a Success.—The dance given by the band boys on Thursday evening was a success both financially and socially, although there was not as large a crowd present as was expected for the first ball of the season. The music furnished by the band was very good and everybody present had a good time. The consensus of opinion that there will not be as many dances in this city the coming winter as has marked the past several years.

Halloween Ball.—The members of the E. F. U. will give a grand ball on the evening of the 31st, on which occasion the general public is invited to appear at the opera house and have a good time. The order has secured the services of the Monarch orchestra so that the best of music may be looked for and there is no reason why every one who attends should not have a good time. Price of dance tickets will be 75 cents.

Gave Them a Farewell.—A large number of friends of Mr. and Mrs. Orrin Gray assembled at their home on Thursday evening to give them a farewell party, and a very pleasant evening was spent by those present. Mr. and Mrs. Gray have long been residents of this city, and they have many friends who regret to know that they are going to make their home in another city.

It was about midnight, and the moon in the east was strong enough to show all the paths through the forest.

It was at this time that the strange and wonderful scene was occurring in front of the old mill, and during which Nora Warner fell into the power of her old-time foe, the man most hateful to her on earth—the mad-house doctor.

As he left the house the Captain cast several glances over his shoulder in order to make sure that he was not followed. The very fact of his doing this would seem to indicate that he was bound upon some errand that would not bear inspection.

Once among the trees he made his way rapidly to a point where the shadows lay deepest, and there upon the ground lay the form of a man, silent and motionless. It was the mysterious foreigner.

The Captain had proven too much for even the keen detective, and his manner of coaxing the man-hunter of the mistake he had made had been a forcible one.

In the struggle, and before Captain Grant had struck a favorable spot with his knife, the detective, whom he held under his knee, having knocked him flat with a sudden and terrible blow, caught two of the fingers of his gloved hand between his teeth, and almost bit them off at a point below the end joint.

The murdered man lay just where he had fallen, and realizing this, the Captain vanished among the trees, returning in less than ten minutes, leading a horse already equipped, which he had secreted in the forest to have ready in case of an emergency, for he was one of those men who always make sure of a way to retreat before proceeding any depth into their schemes.

Presently he was mounted upon the horse with the body of the foreign detective in front of him, and held in such a manner that it looked like a comrade astride, with his head hanging upon his breast.

He kept in the densest portion of the forest, for he did not care to be seen by any one, though the chances of such an event at this hour would have been poor enough even upon the public highway, for the negroes were of too superstitious a nature to think of wandering about the country when ghosts and goblins were supposed to be abroad.

Because of his taking such a round-about way, instead of going direct, he was a much longer time in reaching the old mill than Roger had been when carrying Carol there, earlier in the night.

Strange how his mind should have also turned to this quarter as a place of hiding. Surely there must have been something more than chance in it all.

When he found himself in the immediate neighborhood of the haunted mill, Captain Grant brought his horse to a sudden halt, and placed his dead charge upon the ground. Then, securing his horse, he raised the limp form of the murdered detective in his arms, and, by the exertion of tremendous strength, bore it on.

He disappeared inside the old mill. There was a large chimney at one side of the mill, and, for some purpose or other, a hole had been made in this, the bricks lying upon the floor close by.

It required a Herculean strength to raise the dead detective to this opening; but as he was not a man of over a hundred and thirty pounds in weight, the Captain succeeded in accomplishing it. As he let go his hold he heard the body fall with a thump to the floor. Then all was quiet.

He made no change, nor even touched one of the bricks upon the floor, for though it had at first been his intention to brick up the orifice in the chimney, upon second thought he realized it was wiser to leave things just as they were, for fear of exciting suspitions.

As he turned to leave he either saw, or fancied he did, the head of a man outlined in one of the windows against the light background.

The idea gave him such a start that he fell over a piece of old machinery that lay rusting upon the floor. This was the racket that had reached the ears of Carol and the widow.

As soon as he could recover he fled hastily from the mill, turning once to look back, and then plunging in among the trees like a hunted stag.

Had there been a witness to the horrid burial? He shuddered at the thought, but found it impossible to decide whether it had been real or a specter of his imagination.

CHAPTER XII.

It was twilight.

The trees were moaning a requiem for departed day, and the last ring of red was dying out of the western sky, when Carol suddenly sat up straight, and her heart seemed to stand still as she heard heavy footfalls outside.

An interval of silence ensued, and then there came a rap, loud and clear, upon the door of the haunted mill. Carol held her breath.

She could not imagine anyone else coming at that hour than Roger, and such had been the intensity of her recent thoughts and feelings toward him that it seemed to her she could not dare not meet him face to face, at least until she had time to recover her self-possession. So she remained back while her mother went to the door.

To her astonishment it was a strange voice that fell upon her ear—a voice that was full of eagerness and trembling.

"I have to beg your pardon for this late visit, madam, but I am looking for a friend of mine, and her continued absence has worried me more than I can tell. Have you seen Nora Warner?"

Carol started, for she realized that this person, whoever he might be, was about to receive a shock. Evidently he was quite unaware of the terrible fate that had overtaken the poor girl, and that she was by that time, if still alive, confined within the walls of the mad house that had before been her prison.

Her mother retained her self-possession, though she knew full well there was a blow in store for this gentleman, whoever he might be.

"Step in, sir, and be seated. Do not refuse, for I have that to tell you that will strike a blow at your heart, perhaps, though I know not what relation you bear to Nora Warner," she said.

"Do not keep me in suspense, madam. Nora Warner was very dear to me. In heaven's name tell me what has happened to the poor girl," he pleaded.

You know something of her former history, I presume?" inquired the lady.

She had a double object in view, the idea of finding out what he knew and whether the story of Nora Warner, as told to Carol, were true.

"There is nothing of her past that I do not know, madam, and if she has come to grief I am well aware of the source. Let a hair of her head be injured and her villainous husband, Roger Darrel, must settle with me. Delay no longer. I pray you, for every second is torture to me."

There was something frank in the young man's voice and way of speaking, that went straight to the little lady's heart, and she knew that he was honest and manly, hence she sympathized with him in his sorrow.

"I see you are her friend, sir, and as such I shall confide the facts to you. Nora Warner has again fallen into the hands of those demons from whom she once before escaped. The mad-house doctor has been here."

"Is it possible?"

There was a gritting of the strong teeth, and even in the candle light she could see that the man's face paled with the comprehensive knowledge of what this meant.

"Curses on his head!" he muttered, fiercely, when she was done, "he is the worst demon on earth, and the time will come when retribution will fall upon him, and it shall be my hand that deals the blow. If he has dared to harm a hair of her head I shall torture the life out of him."

When he became calm he made inquiries, for it seemed that Nora had only told him the circumstances of her past without certain particulars, and he was glad to show the torn card which the doctor had left behind him, and which Carol had thoughtfully picked up from the place where she had thrown it on the previous night.

Of course this young man was the same whom we saw in the company of Nora Warner at the time when she fought her memorable duel with Captain Grant, the "Jack" whom the duelist thought he had seen before and yet could not place.

While they talked Carol had joined them and her presence was acknowledged by the young man with a polite bow. He was unable to say what had been Nora's mission in seeking the young girl again, but all he knew was that the poor deceived wife had discovered something of the utmost importance which must be communicated to Carol without delay if she would save her from years of intense suffering. This was what she had been trying her best to tell when the brutal keeper choked her further utterance.

The widow had no dare to tell Jack the full particulars of that terrible scene, for she saw that he was of an excitable temperament, and also that he loved Nora Warner, and she feared the result. It was enough for him to know that she was again in the power of those villains, and as he seemed to possess Nora's entire confidence it might be readily supposed that she had some time in the past given him to understand what manner of man the doctor was.

While they were yet talking, something very like a muffled shriek reached their ears and caused them all to spring up.

"What was that?" asked each in wonder.

"They say this place is haunted because of singular noises heard here at times, but I found them originated in a very commonplace manner, for the loft above this mill was occupied by a troop of wild cats and during the night they were wont to indulge in a melee that to superstitious ears sounded like the shrieks of deadly foes, and their falls from rafters that ended each combat was to them a repetition of the old murder that took place here. I remedied all by shutting up the holes in the window by means of which they gained ingress, and ever since that time I have never been bothered by any unearthly sound. Whatever it was we heard just now, it came from the interior of the mill, and will hear investigation; so, if you would do us a favor, sir, the time is at hand."

Jack was perfectly willing, and the three immediately entered the main portion of the mill by means of a door in the back of the widow's humble kitchen. They had lit a lamp in place of the dim candle, and were thus enabled to look around them in all directions.

When they stood within the mill proper the young man looked around him. He saw but little of interest. The old saw was there, but rusted so that it was almost in pieces, and there were gaping holes in the roof through which both rain and sunshine came at intervals, according to the time.

While they stood thus there came to their ears a plain, unmistakable croak that made them start, and a cold chill run through their frames.

Again it sounded on their ears. This time Jack's face brightened, for he saw the hole in the great chimney, and straining up to it he cried into the orifice:

"Hello! where are you?"

The answer came immediately, and yet was so muffled that they could hardly distinguish it.

"In the chimney. For heaven's sake get me out quick; I believe I am dying."

There was but one way to accomplish this: Jack realized the fact at once. He handed the lamp to the little widow and replaced his revolver, feeling that he would have no occasion to use it, at least for the present.

Then he commenced enlarging the orifice by tearing down the bricks, always working downward. Sometimes he had difficult work, but in the end he succeeded in his task, and the result was that at the end of ten or fifteen minutes he had cleared the way to within a foot or so of the ground.

Then stepping in, he bent down and raised the form of the foreign detective in his stout arms. When he had laid him on the floor of the mill, he bent over to examine the man's ghastly wounds.

"Who did this foul deed?" he asked in horror.

The man whispered in reply, for he was weak and almost dying. Jack uttered a smothered curse and, gaining his feet, cried in a voice that froze Carol with horror:

"Some more of that demon's work. May the curse of heaven blight him and his forever. He is one of Satan's friends and when we meet I shall send him to the toaster he serves. Witness the earth!"

CHAPTER XIV.

The words of the young man came very near killing Carol. Richmond, for of course she thought all along he had reference to the Roger Darrel she knew and loved, and to think of him as a murderer in addition to his other sins would have been enough to have entirely crushed her.

At the time she did not remember that her mother and herself had seen Captain Grant, or some one closely resembling him, leave the mill on the previous night some time between the hour when Nora Warner was carried off by her jailers and daybreak.

All she could think of was this one fact, that besides being guilty of all those other misdeeds, her Roger was not only a murderer at heart, but was in a fair way to become one in fact, for the unfortunate man upon the mill floor looked as though he were dying. Her heart was now stoned against Roger, and at their next meeting she must let him know that he could not even call her friend.

While Carol was thus thinking upon the matter, and deciding as to her future plans, Jack was examining the wounds of the detective.

"My man," said he finally, "you shall live—live for vengeance on the bandit whose hand struck those cowardly blows."

The face of the detective lighted up and a fierce gleam came into his eyes, for he would ask nothing better on earth than this.

Gently raising him, Jack carried the poor man into the habitable part of the building and laid him upon the blankets prepared for him by the widow. Then he proceeded to dress the wounds, and the skill he exercised in this proved him to be a young physician of more than ordinary talents.

He had a case of remedies with him and before leaving the old mill on his search for lost Nora he left the medicines to be used in the hands of Carol's mother.

The detective possessed a magnificent constitution and his wounds were not fatal, so that he was in a fair way for speedy recovery, being in excellent hands. Besides that, the burning desire for revenge upon the man who had dealt him such a cowardly blow was enough of an incentive to keep him alive, for it brought his will into play.

The widow was his attendant, for Carol could not stay in the house, such was the tumult of her thoughts in regard to Roger. But for the fact that Jack, for prudential reasons, had talked of all other subjects before his departure save the one they were interested in, they might have learned that which would have fallen like a bomb between them.

The detective was more communicative, for his heart warmed to the widow as the one to whom he owed his life. He was a Russian by adoption, but in reality was a born Englishman, which accounted for his speaking the language so properly.

The widow had no dare to tell Jack the full particulars of that terrible scene, for she saw that he was of an excitable temperament, and also that he loved Nora Warner, and she feared the result. It was enough for him to know that she was again in the power of those villains, and as he seemed to possess Nora's entire confidence it might be readily supposed that she had some time in the past given him to understand what manner of man the doctor was.

Thus the terrible mistake was allowed to become deeper, and the characters in our story drifted along as the stern decree of fate willed.

THEY DO NOT THROW QUILLS.

Truth About the Frightful Porcupine Told by Old Trappers.

There is something about the porcupine which draws the interest of a great many persons, according to the attendants at the New York Zoological Gardens in the Bronx, says the New York Tribune. It is one of the first animals for which youthful visitors ask when they come to the park, and many of their elders also want to be directed to the porcupine pen.

Some of the visitors have strange ideas about how the porcupine came to have quills and what he can do with them.

"See the pins sticking out of that little black ball," said a fond father who was giving his young hopeful a lesson in natural history. "That's a porcupine, and it fights with those quills. When the dogs come it raises its quills and at the right time shoots them out just like the powder shoots the bullet out of the gun."

"It does, it does it!" exclaimed an old man who was peering through the bars at the same porcupine.

The father looked up quickly, and his glance asked: "And who the dickens are you?"

"They say this place is haunted because of singular noises heard here at times, but I found them originated in a very commonplace manner, for the loft above this mill was occupied by a troop of wild cats and during the night they were wont to indulge in a melee that to superstitious ears sounded like the shrieks of deadly foes, and their falls from rafters that ended each combat was to them a repetition of the old murder that took place here. REPUBLICANS ALARMED.

Campaign of Mayor Rose is Meeting with Most Astounding Success.

ENTHUSIASM IS GREAT.

The Democratic Candidate for Governor

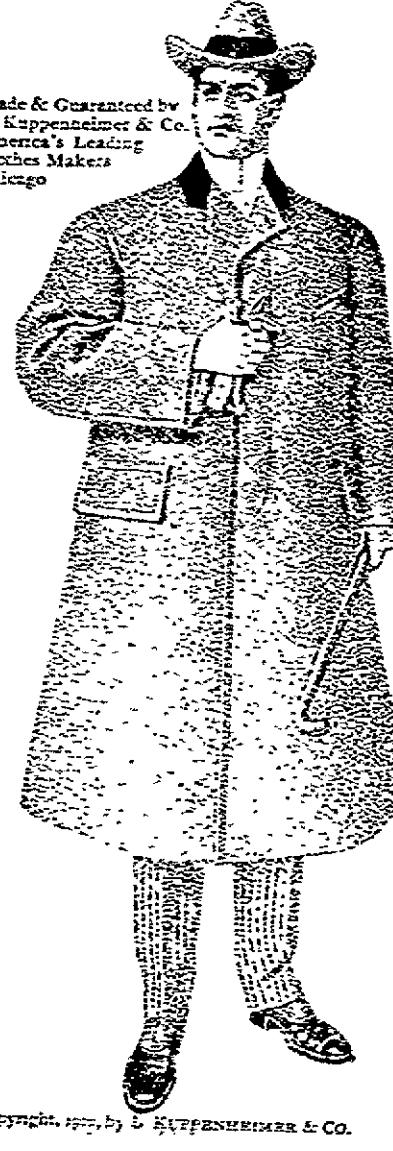

Winning Votes in Every Section of the State.

The fourth week of the campaign of Mayor Rose, the Democratic candidate for governor, opened in a most auspicious manner, and one that augurs well for the success of the Democratic ticket at the polls next month. The great crowds and remarkable enthusiasm with which the Milwaukee mayor is being received everywhere is causing the greatest alarm to his opponents who now concede that he can only be defeated by the hardest kind of work and considerable criticism is being indulged in at the lack of enthusiasm of the Republican campaign which is scarcely heard of, although Gov. La Follette was renominated in July.

Never was the test of popularity so decided to a greater extent than in the tour of Mayor Rose during the past week, when, although rain fell heavily nearly every day, notwithstanding great crowds gathered at every point where he stopped. Men and women stood for hours in the driving rain listening to the man who even Republicans concede put Milwaukee on the map. Hundreds who were attracted through curiosity and who came largely to scoff, went away enthusiastic, wearing the little Rose emblem and shouting for the candidate.

Right to the Point!

We agree with you that the daily news of the world's doings makes more interesting reading than the plain unvarnished facts of an advertisement, but are the reporters' tales so profitable and interesting, yes, attractive, naturally; how better can we offset your prejudice than by making the daily store news brief, by avoiding meaningless trade terms and getting "right to the point." You who do not know the clothing business from the loom to the finished garment must depend upon the reputation of the store from which you buy. Confidence must exist between buyer and seller and too, there must be a strong foundation for that confidence. Enough--let 10 years of fair and upright business decide you where to buy.

The Marshfield Times says: "Regardless of the methods of the opposition, the republican candidates will make a clean and honorable campaign." This looks as if they were figuring on some dirty work. The democrats have always made a clean and honorable campaign, and the only time there was any dirty work done within the writer's memory was four years ago when the republicans waited until the last minute and then got out some questionable stuff and circulated it after the opposition papers had all been printed, hoping thereby to influence the voters by bringing before them a mess of trash that a decent politician would not touch. They should have said: "Regardless of the methods pursued by the republicans in former years they have this year decided to carry on a clean and honorable campaign." Well, laying aside all arguments as to what they may have done heretofore, we are glad they have at last seen the error of their ways and reformed. A clean campaign won't hurt them any, and they may contract the habit, which would be a good thing.

Ellis Usher, who writes for the Milwaukee Journal, predicts that Gov. LaFollette will be elected and Senator Spooner beaten. We don't know what brand Ellis drinks, but it must be something awful to cause any such prediction as this. If he had said that both would be beaten or both would be elected or that Spooner would be elected and LaFollette beaten, there might be some method in his madness. As Mr. Usher's prognostications generally come out the other way, it is probably all right. We have only heard of one republican that was against Mr. Spooner, and that is LaFollette, and even he in his speeches has been telling of the excellent work that Mr. Spooner has been doing in the United States senate, apparently thus trying to dissipate the idea that he had ever said or done anything against his fellow republican, and of course he may be able to make himself think so, but he can't do it with the rest of us. We rather think it will be LaFollette that is retired and Mr. Spooner that holds his job.

The half breeds in the state of Wisconsin have made one of the most graceful flops in their principles ever chronicled in the history of the county. Gov. LaFollette in a speech recently stated that the tariff must be revised. He admitted that a tariff might be too high, but also stated that the trusts were not the outcome of the tariff. He admitted that a tariff that was too high might be taken advantage of by unscrupulous persons, and in the next breath said that the trusts were not caused by the high tariff nor was the tariff in any way responsible for the trusts. Wonder if he is going to revise the tariff if he is elected governor.

We never heard of a governor revising or having anything to do with the tariff, but then of course Bob does things different from what we have been used to having them done. If Bob don't look out he will be getting a sore knee or his voice will be failing him or something will be happening to cause him to retire from active speech making until he can think up something new, the same as Tandy is doing.

Praise Given Mathie's Move

The open statement of President Karl Mathie of the Wisconsin Association, that at the next convention of the association an amendment will be offered to the constitution forbidding the representatives of book companies from being active members of the association, is causing a great deal of talk among teachers of the state and the movement is very generally endorsed. It being the opinion that it will prove a great benefit to the association in removing the book men from being active participants in the association politics.

The leaders of the association believe in doing as well as promising, and besides advocating the amendment to the constitution stated, they have taken a long step forward along the line of reform by enacting a resolution which states in advance that all offers of subscriptions from book companies for the association's expenses will be refused and that in the future no book company will be allowed to give the badges or any other favor to the association.—Milwaukee News.

A Closer View of LaFollette

Orlando Burnett (Amos P. Wilder, editor Madison Journal, rep.): Gov. LaFollette has shown his hand in the Spooner matter, and no man by one act ever so staggered adherents—so undermined simple faith. Many of us felt as Little Neil did in "Old Curiosity Shop" when she saw the old grandfather gambling her earnings away—from that hour he must be watched night and day and she had no one but herself to depend upon.

Slowly the impression is making its way even to the remotest farm that this interesting man has his limitations that sadly confound his professed program of reform. It is feared that generosity, breadth, consideration, the submergence of personal prejudices and hostility in the public good, in short, the large, sane, conservative quality of a statesman are lacking in LaFollette; that hate, jealousy and ambition have dismantled his motives and useriness. I hope it may not be so, but it looks that way.

THROWN INTO THE LAKE.

Sophomores and Freshmen at University in Ducking Melee.

BOLD RAID AT MADISON.

Second Year Men Break Into Students' Rooms and Haze the New Boys.

Madison, Wis., Oct. 4.—[Special.] One of the most daring raids ever made at the University of Wisconsin took place last night between the hours of 9 and 10. Two sophomores walking homeward about 8 o'clock last night encountered about fifty freshmen gathered on the corner of State and Franklin streets. Thinking that the other boys came to be out at that time these sophomore leaders proceeded to join the crowd. The leaders immediately surrounded the two and threatened to give them a bath in the lake. The sophomores, however, solemnly protested that they were Juniors and mainly succeeded in making the under classes believe that such was really the case. They were released and proceeded homeward. When about a block away from the freshman bunch they halted and gave the sophomore yell:

"Skin 'em alive, skin 'em alive."

They then made for their rooms as fast as their legs could carry them.

TWO CLASSES CLASH.

This was the beginning of the trouble. In about one half an hour fifty sophomores had collected and paraded the streets looking for freshmen upon whom to wreak their vengeance for the indignity put upon their class members. The freshmen, meanwhile, had kept together and the two classes met at the corner of Francis and Langdon streets, about one block from the lake. There was a general rush and before the racers was over about a dozen of both classes had been given a taste of the cool water of Lake Mendota.

This incident only whetted the appetite of the sophomores for more fun. They proceeded to the house on Langdon street where lived two freshmen who had painted "66" on the varsity buildings and in this way gained the re-sentiment of the sophomores. Their room was on the ground floor and the yelling mob of sophomores stood outside the window and shouted to the freshmen to come out. This they refused to do. At length one of the sophomores, all other means of access having proved futile, precipitated himself headlong through the window of the freshman's room. Once in he opened the door and let his comrades into the house. The freshmen were carried to the lake and after a few admonitory remarks were quietly and effectively ducked.

Dean Birge on Hazing.

Yesterday morning at convocation Dean Birge spoke very pointedly upon the subject of hazing, deplored the fact that the good name of the university should be tarnished through the action of a very few. He "roasted" not only the hazers, but also those who had defaced the university grounds and buildings.

The dean saw several sophomores a few evenings ago engaged in tormenting a freshman and the facts outbreak has thoroughly aroused him. Vague rumors of suspensions are in the air, but are probably without foundation as so far nothing really malicious has been done. The fun has all gone on good naturedly.

On Monday the annual class rush will take place.

FRATERNITIES PLEDGING NEW MEMBERS.

The "rush" season of the fraternities of the University of Wisconsin is on in full swing now and many of the new students are paying as much attention to the numerous "frat" doings as to their studies. The fraternities will be very strong this year as they have already pledged a considerable number of new members. The lists of pledged members are not yet complete; the Wisconsin will print the names of all the new members as soon as these lists are completed.

SAYS LORD CAME TO HIM.

REV. A. DALSTROM CLAIMS HE WAS INSPIRED TO WRITE A BOOK.

The Publication Leads to a Discussion and He is Arrested for Using Abusive Language.

West Superior, Wis., Oct. 4.—[Special.]—The Lord spoke in Swedish to me and told me that He was well satisfied with me, that I had done well, was a good and faithful servant and should go forth and write a book on the subject of marriage," says Rev. Albert Dalstrom in the preface to a book printed in the Swedish language, and which book helped to make the trouble in which Mr. Dalstrom now finds himself here. He is in court today to answer to the charge of using abusive language toward Mrs. G. Johnson.

The book referred to was written by Rev. Mr. Dalstrom after he had broken away from the Salvation Army and after he had left the city of St. Paul. The Scandinavian people there made it unpleasant for him by raising something of a scandal about him—a preacher and a married man—and "well might disown," as his book says, by some, in a hotel in the suburbs of Chicago. There on a Sunday the Lord appeared to him in person and told him to write his book.

After the visitation Mr. Dalstrom grew doubtful and he wondered whether it was not some Swedish man come to make sport of him. He sought the proprietor of the hotel; there had been no other Swedish man registered there and there was no Swedish man connected with the hotel. It must have been a stranger. So Rev. Dalstrom says he was convinced that he had been honored by a special visitation and he wrote a book expounding his views on the subject of marriage.

It is the sentiment in this book that prompted the questions put in the preacher's tent meeting here, which questions brought forth, it is alleged, the denunciation, "Woman, you are a liar and a low woman."

And next day the preacher was arrested and placed under bonds to appear today and answer to the charge. The preacher has some admirers here who will help him save his case if help is called for. He has adopted a course of pitching into church people in his meetings and this has pleased a certain element. Rev. Dalstrom is well known to Scandinavian people throughout the Northwest and gained considerable notoriety by his meetings at St. Paul.

West Superior, Wis., Oct. 4.—[Special.]—Safe crackers of the Blain high school of this city last night, all about $110 was secured from the building, the safe being blown open and everything that was of any value being taken. From the safe the robbers took $60 belonging to L. A. Nichols, the secretary of the school board. In addition there was a small sum of money belonging to the school children of the Howe school, they having collected it to purchase pictures for the building. In the hall of the building was a desk belonging to the janitor. He had $30 stolen there. The robbers got it. A few nights ago the Superior hardware store was burglarized.

A BIG SHOE FACTORY.

From a Small Beginning in 1880 it Grows to Immense Proportions.

THE F. MAYER BOOT & SHOE CO. of Milwaukee, Wis., now occupies 3½ Acres of Floor Space, and has capacity for making 6000 pairs of Shoes per Day.

Just 22 years ago Mr. F. Mayer established a shoe factory in Milwaukee, and began the manufacture of shoes in a modest way. The working force at that time was small and the facilities inadequate, yet it was the foundation of what was destined to be one of the largest shoe factories in this country. The underlying business principle was, then, as now, to produce the best shoes possible at the lowest prices. That this policy was successful has been demonstrated by the fact that shoes bearing the Mayer trade mark are now sold in every state and territory west of the Ohio river. Over 600 people are kept busy as bees supplying a demand that has steadily increased as a result of the universal satisfaction given by Mayer's shoes.

Milwaukee being the home of the biggest leather tanneries in the world, and also the market for the very best shoe leather known, gives the Milwaukee manufacturer advantages in cost as well as the choice of leather that outside manufacturers cannot obtain, thus enabling the Mayer shoe factory to turn out better shoes at less cost than outside competitors.

Something like 40 traveling salesmen are required to visit merchants in thousands of towns and villages in twenty different states. The magnitude of this business can best be appreciated when you take into consideration that, with the present capacity, 6000 complete pairs of shoes can be turned out every working day.

The business is now conducted under the name of the F. Mayer Boot & Shoe Co., by the three sons of Mr. F. Mayer, who succeeded him in the business. As Mayer's shoes are being liberally advertised the further growth of the company is sure to be rapid.

A Historic Hitching Post.

One of the oldest signs in Washington is the cast iron figure of a Chinaman, about 3½ feet in height, that stands in front of a livery stable on Sixth street northwest, between Pennsylvania and Louisiana avenues. It has been there since 1882 and is one of the familiar landmarks of the city.

During the Civil War Gen. Grant, McClellan, Hooker and others, who patronized this stable a great deal, tied their steeds to this hitching post, and since then other distinguished personages have had occasion to use this post during every presidential inauguration that has occurred since Lincoln's second term.

As a matter of fact, this much of Sixth and Louisiana avenues is a historic locality in more than one sense. It was on the corner of this street and Louisiana avenue that Gen. Robert E. Lee bade farewell to his old commander, Gen. Winfield Scott, when the former withdrew from the union army to join that of the confederates. During the first two years of the war Gen. McClellan and others came here regularly to purchase and inspect horses, it being at that time a sort of horse market.—Baltimore American.

Sagacity of Hawks.

A strange instance of sagacity in two peripeters has just been told. They had often been seen following trains in Croton, without any explanation suggesting itself—until one afternoon the train suddenly put up a cover of rearing partridges. Down swooped the hawk at the cover and carried off one of them, and this gave the answer to the riddle. The cunning bird must have noticed, while soaring for his pleasure, that the noise of the train often put up game, and this gave him the idea of making use of the train as a beater for his own benefit.

as he adjusted his glasses, to the smart young man.

"Yes, sir," replied the clerk.
"Absent from illness?"

"No, sir."
"Oh, you're honest, at any rate. Most men would say they were."

"I haven't been absent from illness for nearly a year."

"You haven't?" The old man looked surprised.

"No, sir. It has been with me all the time."

"What has?"

"Illness of some sort."

"But you said that yesterday—"

"Yesterday I was absent on account of illness, sir."

The old man thought the master over for a minute or two, and then he said:

"Yes, sir; I see. You're rather particular in the use of words."

"Yes, sir. Study to use them correctly."

"Of course, and I'm a trifle careless. Now, please see if this sentence is correct: 'Hereafter you will be absent from my displeasure.'"

"Yes, sir."

"You will also be absent on account of my displeasure."

The English papers tell of a young Parisian in London, visiting the "Chamber of Horrors" at Tussaud's. Being alone he was seized with an impulse to put his neck in the lumiere wherein had rested that of Marie Antoinette. He lay down, touched spring, and closed the collar. But how was he to release himself? If he touched the wrong spring the fatal axe might descend. Before long a crowd of visitors, led by an attendant, came on the scene. The guide was a bit of a linguist, and saw an opportunity, with himself as master of the situation. He at once began a practical lecture on the guillotine, interrupting his remarks with little asides in French to the indignant victim, asking him to scream louder or write more agonizingly. "How well he acts!" exclaimed the gratified onlookers. Finally the Parisian was released, and, answering the applause with maledictions, fled.

The Leipzig warehouses receive raw and half-prepared furs from Siberia, European Russia, America, Australia, and China, making the business of the fur exchange worth from $15,000,000 to $17,000,000 yearly.

Alfalfa Clover.

From Fond du Lac comes a report that farmers are trying alfalfa as a fodder plant with much success. Alfalfa is a sort of a clover which yields three crops a year and is a excellent fodder and of some good as a pasture.

The peculiar value of this plant is not confined to feeding purposes. It has a wonderful capacity for extracting nitrogen from the atmosphere and transferring it to the soil. So it becomes a fertilizer of great value. But here it has another peculiarity. This power to extract nitrogen depends on certain little nodules clustering about the roots and these in turn depend on a particular microbe, or something of the sort, which exists in some soils and not in others. Where this particular microbe is absent, alfalfa does not do well. But by scattering some little soil from infected fields, the plant begins to prosper and soon has all its needs. So if the alfalfa does not grow luxuriantly as it should, very likely a little fertilization from soil in which it has prospered will set the plant "on its feet." Much of the prairie soil is already impregnated with this microbe. Some sandy soils are without it. Any soil will retain it when once introduced. Application to any of the agricultural bureaus at Washington, will bring circulars of information and directions. Farmers should all be in close communication with these bureaus, anyway.
